The large and long-lived Thomist school of philosophy and theology has not yet been catalogued. Brief histories have been written to record the chief periods and representatives of the Thomist School, and many studies have been made of particular pockets of it. But these have not been all put together.

Certainly one reason for this not having been done is the enormity of the task. Indeed, a full account would require years of research, and result in a several-volume work. Since it was unlikely that anyone would attempt such a time-consuming and expensive enterprise, I have attempted something more modest. First, a decision was made to be tolerant of incomplete source material. Books not available in an excellent library, and difficult to obtain by inter-library loan, were not consulted unless they seemed likely to yield more than minimal new information. Second, it was decided to record only a minimum amount of information for each entry (this information is discussed below). Third, it was determined that entries would be made if some even of this minimal information were

If we accept the Catalogue as being an accurate reflection of the true situation, we see that more than half of the Thomists in each century were Dominicans, except for the nineteenth century, when only 11% were members of St. Thomas Aquinas's own community. Also, of other religious in the Thomist camp, only Jesuits have been present in large numbers, and their peak membership was in the seventeenth century.

There was a noticeable drop in the number of Thomists about 1400 A.D., but the number then increased until the eighteenth century, when a significant decrease occurred. In the nineteenth century the number of Thomists grew dramatically, though not among Dominicans. And this increase is explained only partially by the publication of Aeterni Patris in 1879, since there were many Thomists before that date. And we know that the twentieth century has witnessed an even greater growth in Thomist ranks, at least until 1960.

I would like to thank Sister Terese Auer, John Hood, Thomas Oey, James Witherspoon, and Karen Zedlick, for their assistance in preparing the Catalogue. Also Father Janusz Ihnatowicz for translating Polish source-material. Also the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies for the use of its library, and the Basilian Fathers of the Institute and of St. Michael's College, Toronto, who made life so pleasant outside the library. And Joanne Knasas for two years of revisions on the word-processor.
